I Thought Russian Economy was Going to Collapse?
The Japanese Yen Nightmare of 2026

The George Soros Fund Management apologist, Scott Bessent, wants the US to reignite the Bretton Woods System to manage the dollars' continued decline. The Bretton Woods system was abolished by Nixon in 1971 as it was tagged to the value of gold, but America's gold reserve vaults are likely completely empty. Such a revelation would have the effect of an immediate collapse of the economy internally and globally – initiating a selloff of treasuries to scrape 10 cents on the dollar. The selloff of treasuries would collapse every agency within the federal government within 24 hours. It would also liquefy social security and medicare.

Japan, holding the largest share of treasuries, would be the first casualty spiraling into a graveyard. The dominoes would then destroy those countries with the highest value of treasuries and the lowest reserves of gold – the UK, Belgium and Canada. A global implosion of fake wealth. China has somewhat mitigated this catastrophic economic peril by buying gold continually for years, while the UK, Belgium and Canada have openly depleted theirs holding zero reserves. Only Italy matches China's stated holdings at 2.4 tons. If Trump is attempting to reestablish reserves via Venezuela – the time frame is past due. It is more likely Venezuela's reserves are being forwarded to Trump's personal bank account given they do not appear on any treasury balance sheet.

How are a countries gold reserves determined? The figure relies nearly 100 percent on what any country's government declares as opposed to any literal validity or audit. Given the last audit conducted by the US was completed around 1984, it is increasingly doubtful given the deficit, the CIA use of gold to pay mercenaries and trafficking expenses, and the liberal use of lies, the validation of the US statement on reserves has any connection to reality. In order for Bessent's Bretton Woods proposal to be initiated, physical external audits would be necessitated.

Bessent's first job was with Saudi Arabia's Olayan Group despite zero financial proficiency. Thereafter he joined a Greek fund before being called to second base by Soros as they manipulated the British Pound and made billions shorting the collapse of the British Pound – dubbed Black Wednesday. The Bank of Japan is sounding the alarm that Bessent and the Japanese government led by Sanae

Takaishi, who took office in 2025 and has vowed her absolute devotion to Trump, are going to collapse Japan’s economy and wipe out all savings to save US Treasury’s from being sold. Japan’s finance minister claims Bessent and Takaishi have taken over the Bank and are trying to force him to buy Japanese Treasuries which he, Yuko, claims will be a financial catastrophe and completely destroy the currency causing all savings accounts to disappear in the melee as the Yen spirals.

Yuko claims this is a hostile takeover of Japan. And the entire world is about to be negatively impacted as the “petrodollar” loses its place as the apparatus for global trade and is replaced by the Yuan and Crypto. Iran and China planned the demise using the Strait as bait. Trump took the bait. Bessent is pushing gold without knowing if our vaults are empty. Japan has been desperately selling off US Treasuries as has China, Taiwan, Luxembourg, India, Canada, UAE and Saudi Arabia. Saudi Arabia also cut all oil exports to the US as of July.

Trump's fever pitch call highlighting Muslim Communists in America is simply a distraction from a collapsing dollar amidst Treasury selloffs as the power shift gravitates. The common enemy theme was used by Bush to bury The Pentagon and CIA siphoning of American taxpayer funds in the trillions. Bush needed a major distraction – he helped engineer 9/11. Bessent justifying the tariff refunds to big conglomerates who actually benefited over the tariffs in jacked up prices, is focusing on giving them cash to buy secure commodities as the dollar and respect for America plunges. While speaking at the International Institute of Finance regarding his Bretton Woods theory, Bessent believes that Bretton Woods made the entire globe financially wealthy and secure.

Bretton Woods, did not make the world wealthy, it solidified America's power over every other country through America's claim that we had more gold than any other nation. It was that simplistic. In 1944, total Treasury holds of gold was determined to be 628.4 million troy ounces per the Treasury Secretary, Henry Morgenthou Jr. of Jewish descent. The shipments of gold to Fort Knox from the US Bullion Depository was overseen by the US Post Office Department in the 1930's and 1940's. The reserves declared to be in Fort Knox are a fourth of what they were in 1944.

Bretton Woods collapsed because there wasn't enough gold to back US dollars. That was 1971. What led to the collapse? While high inflation, the Federal Reserve playing with rates, Vietnam War, and public debt have been cited, European countries began to question the hegemony of the US, the value of its word, and its financial transparency. As a result, they began to demand an exchange of their currencies pegged to the dollar for gold. Gold that may not have existed.

The Iran War could become the most auspicious mistake in recorded history precipitating the fall of the US economy. Gold has risen 10 percent since Bessent moved on the Bank of Japan a week ago. Bitcoin has followed gold. The dollar continues its downward trend. Treasuries are backed by “faith” not gold. Total amount of Federal Treasuries outstanding? $40 trillion. Total cash on hand at US banks – $3 trillion, supposedly. All the King’s Horses claiming the $40 trillion in debt is meaningless are head-in-sand ostrich eggs. Knowing Bessent came to the Treasury directly from Soros Fund Management, was Soros the one who pushed the Iran War on Trump as the means to execute another Black Wednesday?

Does Netanyahu take his orders from Soros who takes his orders from the Rothschilds? Trump is a goy. He will always be a goy. Soros nominating his number one flunky as our Treasury Secretary is not a coincidence. The Japan crisis is much larger than the media is reporting. Likely because they don’t understand – haven’t researched – and are scripted to say what their master’s require. While the broke White House continues to lie, Trump is selling $15 billion in weapons inventory to Israel, Bessent wants $60 billion to mitigate Japan's near collapse, and tariff rebates ignore the people in favor of friends of Trump.

The wobbling Japanese yen could trigger a global financial crisis. The yen recently reached a 40-year low against the dollar. The fear is that a further fall in the currency's value will precipitate a crisis of confidence that will not only set off a serious bout of inflation inside Japan, but also adversely impact financial markets around the world.

That's why the US and Japan both used dollars to buy the yen. The intervention has had success. However, most experts believe the relief will be short-lived because of adverse fundamentals in Japan: a too-low short-term interest rate, which is one percent vs. around 3.5 percent in the US; a national debt that is proportionately twice that of the US; rising energy prices; and a declining and aging population.

The immediate worry for US Treasury Secretary Scott Bessent is that in an effort to save the yen from collapse, Japan will start liquidating its $1.1 trillion portfolio of Treasury bonds and bills, not to mention its holdings of German and British bonds. Such sales would put pressure on interest rates. After all, financing our immense budget deficits and refinancing some $7 trillion of our existing debt that's coming up for renewal. This anxiety, for instance, is why the interest rate on our 30-year Treasury bond has reached its highest level in almost 20 years.

Bessent wants the Federal Reserve to beef up a facility it created in 2020 to deal with a dollar shortage caused by the pandemic and use it now to help the yen. He could also employ a Depression-era facility called the Exchange Stabilization Fund. The idea is that through these devices Japan could borrow dollars using its Treasury holdings as collateral. This help is nice, but there are better, more immediate ways to deal with the crisis. Japan should boost its utterly unrealistic short-term interest rate. Another important thing that both the US and Japan should do is to announce that they want a stable rate between the dollar and the yen. They might even give a range of, say, 150 to 155 yen to the dollar and make clear that the two countries would massively intervene in the exchange markets to keep it there. Japan would, if necessary, reduce the supply of yen to keep it in that range. These steps would quash the immediate crisis.

A cratering yen has set off alarms on Wall Street and in financial centers around the world. If the Bank of Japan sells its behemoth stockpile US Treasuries (now exceeding $1.2 trillion) to support its sagging currency, the US bond market could go into a nosedive dragging the global economy off a cliff. That is why on Friday, July 31, US Treasury Secretary Scott Bessent launched an unprecedented currency intervention to prop up the anemic yen and to forestall an impending financial meltdown. Surprisingly, Bessent implemented a euros-for-yen trade via the New York Fed so as not to weaken the dollar or trigger a selloff in bonds.

The gravity of the intervention, however, was not lost on jumpy investors who have connected the dots and understand that America's $40 trillion debt Ponzi is growing increasingly unstable and could trigger another financial crisis. In short, the teetering yen is merely the canary in the coal mine signaling deeper structural issues that could take down the entire dollar-based house of cards.

The United States and Japan are already massively meddling in the market to scare off short sellers who don't think market fundamentals support a strong yen. In effect, Bessent is saying that if they bet against the yen, they will be crushed by the combined firepower of the Fed and its ally in Japan. In other words, anyone who invests believing that the market is “free and fair” will be clobbered. Second, the “facility” to which Forbes refers, is another Fed-generated bailout outfit similar to ones created during the Great Financial Crisis. It is called The Foreign and International Monetary Authorities Repo Facility or FIMA which is operated through the Federal Reserve Bank of New York “to help prop up the yen with dollar loans” in order to discourage Japan from dumping its US debt. Simply put, it's a bailout facility. The Fed is issuing dollar-backed loans to prevent the market from rebalancing and to avoid a catastrophic sell-off of US debt that could put the global financial system into downward death spiral.
